

Art Is All Around Denver This Week!

SUSAN FROYD OCTOBER 2, 2021

The fall gallery season continues to ramp up, and after a big First Friday, plenty of Denver art is on view.

Co-ops display a strong showing by members new and old, while the Chicano Humanities and Arts Council, hunting for an affordable space, is raising awareness with a new show in RiNo and hosting an early Día de los Muertos display in Arvada.

That's just the start of the action. Keep reading for the best offerings on the art scene right now:

Revolutions Unbound, 2019, wax on muslin, 43 x 72 in. (109.2 x 182.8 cm)

Ronny Quevedo: at the line

Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center at Colorado College, 30 West Dale Street, Colorado Springs

Now through December 5
In Conversation: at the line: Thursday, November 4, 6 p.m.

When the Denver Art Museum's newly refurbished and transformed Martin Building reopens later this month, a work by Ecuadorian artist Ronny Quevedo will be on display in the opening exhibition ReVisión: Art in the Americas, a bold juxtaposition of ancient and modern works interrelated through historical ties. But if you want to zero in on Quevedo and his particular artistic revisions, head down to CSFAC for at the line, a fascinating show of new and recent drawings incorporating delicate pattern paper, carbon paper, cloth and contact paper overlaid with metal leaf, wax and enamel, as well as sculptures evoking elements of basketball courts and correlating Mesoamerican games.