Ronny Quevedo, “ule ole allez” Locust Projects Nov. 23, 2022–Feb. 4, 2023

On view at Locust Projects, a renowned alternative art space in Miami, “ule ole allez” is a large-scale installation by Ecuadorian-born artist Ronny Quevedo that focuses on fostering a sense of play and community. Inspired by Miami's Latinx soccer and futsal scene, the project employs sports as a metaphor for themes of survival and adaptation as they relate to the migrant experience.

Set to be Quevedo's first solo show in Miami, “ule ole allez” was conceived as a collaborative art project for which the artist invited local community-based soccer and futsal teams to take part. The participating teams played public matches on fields that Quevedo covered with canvas and paper to collect traces from the players' movements during the game. These mediums were then used by the Queens-based artist to create a massive installation at the Locust Projects space.
